Built during the 11th and 12th centuries by the Ikshvaku dynasty, this temple dedicated to Lord Shiva revels in its architectural glory

The Age of Miracles

Less than two hours from Hyderabad is the Chhaya Someswara Swamy Temple in Panagal, a quiet little town in the Nalgonda district known for its religious significance.

Dedicated to Lord Shiva, this ancient temple built by the Kunduru Cholas in the 12th century is considered to be an exemplary model of ingenious Hindu architecture. For there is a constant and unwavering shadow that falls on the main deity in the exact same way all through the day. Though it is this mystery as to the origin and the unchanging quality of the chhaya (shadow) that gives this ancient temple its fame. It is this unique feature that is also considered a striking testimony to the architectural brilliance of that era. It is believed that all the various pillars in the temple were placed so strategically that they together cast only a single unchanging shadow, no matter the time of the day and the direction of the light.

These very pillars are also famed for the exquisite sculptures carved into them. The immensely popular Chhaya Someswara Swamy Temple together with the nearby Pachala Someswara Swamy temple attract devotees in droves during the festival of Shivaratri.
